activities at home

Planning the day for a person with moderate or severe dementia
Activities are the “things we do,” like getting dressed, doing chores, playing cards — even paying bills. They can be active or passive, done alone or with others.

A person with dementia will eventually need a caregiver’s assistance to organize the day. Planned activities can enhance the person’s sense of dignity and self-esteem in the later stages of the disease by giving more purpose and meaning to his or her life.

Activities structure time. They can make the best of a person’s abilities, enhance quality of life and facilitate relaxation. Activities can also provide a sense of purpose, engagement, usefulness and accomplishment, which can help reduce behavior like wandering or agitation.

Both a person with dementia and his or her caregiver can enjoy the sense of security and togetherness that activities can provide.
types of activities

Daily routines

Chores: Dusting, sweeping, doing laundry.

Mealtime: Preparing food, cooking, eating.

Personal care: Bathing, shaving, getting dressed.

Other activities

Creative: Painting, playing the piano.

Intellectual: Reading a book, doing crossword puzzles.

Physical: Taking a walk, playing catch.

Social: Having coffee, talking, playing cards.

Spiritual: Praying, singing a hymn.

Spontaneous: Going out to dinner, visiting friends.

Work-related: Making notes, typing, fixing something.
1. planning activities

While planning activities for a person with dementia, focus on the person, activity, approach and place.

Person

Consider the person’s likes and dislikes, strengths and abilities, and interests. As the disease progresses, keep activities flexible and be ready to make adjustments.

Keep the person’s skills and abilities in mind

Stick with activities the person has always enjoyed and adjust, as needed, to match the person’s current abilities.

Pay special attention to what the person enjoys

Take note when the person seems happy, anxious, distracted or irritable. Some people enjoy watching sports, while others may be frightened by the fast pace or noise.

Consider whether the person begins activities without direction

Does he or she set the table before dinner or sweep the kitchen floor mid-morning? If so, you may wish to plan these activities as part of the daily routine.

Be aware of physical problems

Does he or she get tired quickly or have difficulty seeing, hearing or performing simple movements? If so, you may want to avoid certain activities.
Activity

Focus on enjoyment, not achievement
Find activities that build on remaining skills and talents. A professional artist might become frustrated over the declining quality of work, but an amateur might enjoy a new opportunity for self-expression.

Encourage involvement in daily life
Activities that help the individual feel like a valued part of the household — like setting the table, wiping counter tops or emptying wastebaskets — can provide a sense of success and accomplishment.

Relate activity to work life
A former office worker might enjoy activities that involve organizing, like putting coins in a holder, helping to assemble a mailing or making a to-do list. A farmer or gardener may take pleasure in working in the yard.

Look for favorites
The person who always enjoyed drinking coffee and reading the newspaper may still find these activities enjoyable, even if he or she is no longer able to completely understand what the newspaper says.

Change activities as needed
Try to be flexible and acknowledge the person’s changing interests and abilities.

Consider time of day
Caregivers may find they have more success with certain activities at specific times of day, such as bathing and dressing in the morning. Keep in mind that your typical daily routine may need to change somewhat.

Adjust activities to disease stages
As the disease progresses, you may want to introduce more repetitive tasks. Be prepared for the person to eventually take a less active role in activities.
Approach

Offer support and supervision
You may need to show the person how to perform the activity and provide simple, step-by-step directions.

Concentrate on the process, not the result
Does it matter if the towels are folded properly? Not really. What matters is that you were able to spend time together, and the person feels as if he or she has done something useful.

Be flexible
When the person insists that he or she doesn’t want to do something, it may be because he or she is unable or afraid. Don’t force it. If the person insists on doing something a different way, let it happen and change it later if necessary.

Be realistic and relaxed
Don’t be concerned about filling every minute of the day with an activity. The person with Alzheimer’s needs a balance of activity and rest, and may need more frequent breaks and varied tasks.

Help get the activity started
Most people with dementia still have the energy and desire to do things but may lack the ability to organize, plan, initiate and successfully complete the task.

Break activities into simple, easy-to-follow steps
Focus on one task at a time. Too many directions at once can be overwhelming.

Assist with difficult parts of the task
If you’re cooking and the person can’t measure the ingredients, finish the measuring and encourage a different task, such as: “Would you please stir this for me?”

Let the individual know he or she is needed
Ask, “Could you please help me?” Be careful, however, not to place too many demands on the person.
Make the connection
If you ask the person to make a card, he or she may not respond. But if you say that you’re sending a special get-well card to a friend and invite him or her to join you, the person may enjoy working on the task.

Don’t criticize or correct the person
If the person enjoys a harmless activity, even if it seems insignificant or meaningless to you, encourage the person to continue.

Encourage self expression
Include activities that allow the person a chance for expression. These types of activities could include painting, drawing, music or conversation.

Involv the person through conversation
While you’re polishing shoes, washing the car or cooking dinner, talk to the person about what you’re doing. Even if the person cannot respond, he or she is likely to benefit from your communication.

Substitute an activity for a behavior
If a person with dementia rubs his or her hand on a table, put a cloth in his or her hand and encourage the person to wipe the table. Or, if the person is moving his or her feet on the floor, play some music so he or she can tap them to the beat.

Try again later
If something isn’t working, it may just be the wrong time of day or the activity may be too complicated. Try again later or adapt the activity.
Place

Make activities safe
Modify a workshop by removing toxic materials and dangerous tools so an activity such as sanding a piece of wood can be safe and enjoyable.

Change your surroundings to encourage activities
Place scrapbooks, photo albums or old magazines in easily accessible spots to help the person reminisce.

Minimize distractions that can frighten or confuse
A person with dementia may not be able to recall familiar sounds and places or may feel uncomfortable in certain settings.

Effective activities:
- Bring meaning, purpose, joy and hope to the person’s life.
- Use the person’s skills and abilities.
- Give the person a sense of normalcy.
- Involve family and friends.
- Are dignified and appropriate for adults.
- Are enjoyable.
- Focus on the process, not the end result.
10 quick tips for activities at home

1. Be flexible and patient.
2. Encourage involvement in daily life.
3. Avoid correcting the person.
4. Help the person remain as independent as possible.
5. Offer opportunities for choice.
7. Establish a familiar routine.
8. Respond to the person’s feelings.
9. Simplify, structure and supervise.
10. Provide encouragement and support.
2. creating a daily plan

Consider how you organize your own day when planning the day for a person with dementia. There are times when they may want variety and others when routine is best. The challenge is to find activities that provide meaning and purpose, as well as enjoyment.

Begin by thinking about the past week. Try keeping a daily journal and make notes about:

› Which activities worked best and which didn’t? Why?

› Were there times when there was too much going on or too little to do?

› Were spontaneous activities enjoyable or did they create anxiety and confusion?

Use what you’ve learned to set up a written daily plan. A planned day allows you to spend less time and energy trying to figure out what to do from moment to moment. Allow yourself and the person with dementia some flexibility for spontaneous activities, as well as time to rest.

3. measuring the plan's success

To decide how the daily plan is working, think about how the person responds to each activity and how well it meets your needs. The success of an activity can vary from day to day. In general, if the person seems bored, distracted or irritable, it may be time to introduce another activity or to take time out for rest.

Structured and pleasant activities can often reduce agitation and improve mood. The type of activity and how well it’s completed are not as important as the joy and sense of accomplishment the person gets from doing it.
Sample daily plan

Morning
Wash, brush teeth, get dressed.
Prepare and eat breakfast.
Have coffee, make conversation.
Discuss the newspaper, try a craft project, reminisce about old photos.
Take a break, have some quiet time.
Do some chores together.
Take a walk, play an active game.

Afternoon
Prepare and eat lunch, read mail, wash dishes.
Listen to music, do crossword puzzles, watch TV.
Do some gardening, take a walk, visit a friend.
Take a short break or nap.

Evening
Prepare and eat dinner, clean up the kitchen.
Reminisce over coffee and dessert.
Play cards, watch a movie, give a massage.
Take a bath, get ready for bed, read a book.
The Alzheimer’s and Dementia Caregiver Center offers reliable information and easy access to resources, such as:

- Alzheimer’s Navigator® – Assess your needs and create customized action plans.
- Community Resource Finder – Find local resources.
- ALZConnected® – Connect with other caregivers and family members who can relate to your situation.
- Care Team Calendar – Coordinate caregiving responsibilities among family and friends.
- Safety Center – Access information and resources for safety inside and outside of the home, wandering and getting lost, and dementia and driving.

Support groups, education programs and more available in communities nationwide.

24/7 Helpline – Available all day, every day.

Our vision is a world without Alzheimer’s®.